FOREWORD

THE 1937 ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PAINTING

constitutes the sixth in the series, inaugurated in 1932, of alternating exhibitions, one year of paintings in oil, the following year of sculpture, watercolors, drawings and prints. Commencing in 1937 and in the future each of these exhibitions will be given annually.

As in the past, no jury is appointed to choose the exhibits, the Museum accepting the responsibility for the painters invited. The choice of the work contributed is left to the judgment of the artist.

To avoid the disproportionate emphasis often placed upon a few works singled out for cash prizes and other honors, it is the Museum's policy to eliminate such awards and instead to acquire outstanding works for the Museum's collection. These purchases are made from an annual fund of twenty thousand dollars available for this purpose.

One hundred and fifteen artists have contributed a painting each to the present exhibition. Though limitations of space necessarily exclude many artists of equal importance to those invited, each exhibition includes a large proportion of new names. This year fifty-six artists are represented who were not included in the previous exhibition of contemporary American painting.
